Q: Retrieve a matrix from a mongo shell aggregate Currently I'm trying to perform some analysis on a dataset using mongodb. So I've decided to add some entries to the dataset so I can do some aggregate queries on it. I created a mongodb database, added some entries to it and check them by querying it using: mongo db.test.aggregate([{'$lookup': {'from': 'user_data', 'localField': '_id', 'foreignField': 'userId'}}]) Now I'd like to know if there is a way to retrieve the whole matrix that I added to the database? Ideally it would be something like: db.test.aggregate([{'$lookup': {'from': 'user_data', 'localField': '_id', 'foreignField': 'userId'}}, {'$group': {_id:{'lastname':'$lastName'}, '_id1:{'_id':'$userId'}}}]) So I could have something like this: { '_id': { '_id': User, 'lastname': 'LastName1', '_id1': 25 }, }, }, }, }, }, Any idea of how I

Postpneumonic bronchiolitis in two neonates. Two premature neonates developed respiratory distress following discharge from the neonatal intensive care unit. During intensive therapy, a protracted course in the pediatric intensive care unit was required. The two neonates demonstrated decreased lung compliance, increased airway resistance, and severe hypoxemia. Bronchiolitis was diagnosed, consistent with cytomegalovirus (CMV) virus isolated from cultures of the tracheal wash specimens. Supportive care resulted in gradual resolution of the clinical and radiologic abnormalities.A biofuel that could help offset rising oil prices is gaining attention as many scientists say it is sustainable and can be produced using soil bacteria that is also readily available and inexpensive. The fuel, known as methanol, is a volatile liquid that can be used in a car engine just like gasoline. It can be made from food or human waste products like sewer sludge. And it can be purchased from corn producers at a fraction of the price of gasoline. The research team at Texas A&M University said the methanol from such waste could be used in cars without taxing the environment, noting it can be produced economically using a process called anaerobic digestion, which uses bacteria to break down organic matter. The work, carried out at the university's bioenergy research center, was published in ACS Applied Materials & Interfaces. "We can make this stuff ourselves, using components that are inexpensive, readily available, and readily broken down by soil bacteria," said Ramesh Babu, one of the authors and a materials scientist. "It is a [non-fossil fuel] that is needed to help reduce the use of carbon-based fuel, which is getting increasingly expensive, and increase domestic production to protect the country's oil reserves." The potential revenue for the scientists is clear. They said they calculated a price of about $26 per gallon based on the national average of $2.50 a gallon. The researchers said they expect it to be more expensive than gasoline because most of the waste used for the process is agricultural and more expensive to buy than corn. "It could be the next big thing in biofuels," said Susan Swenson, a professor of biomolecular engineering and chemistry at the university. The only problem is that methanol is acidic. Swenson said the scientists are working on creating additives that will make the fuel safe. "So it is not as
