Description Anoles are lizards of the family Dactyloidae. They have short, flat bodies, and long legs. The genus name, Anolis, is Latin for "repeating nothings," and refers to the male's habit of repeating his mating calls. The specific ephippiatus means "waist or gap." The cabbage tree anole is a small anole, typically less than, with a stout tail. It can be distinguished from its close relatives Anolis allisoni and Anolis gehringi by its combination of light-colored stripes on the sides of its back and a dark-brown or black tail (the tail of the other two species is usually lighter colored). It is generally grayish-brown in color and is only noticeable to the eye when the lizard raises its head. Geographic range Anolis ephippiatus is found in the western United States and Mexico. Its geographic range includes the border areas
