software was developed by the Optical Solutions Group at Synopsys. “CODE V is an incredible optical design and analysis tool! The ray tracing is very fast and adds so much more to the modeling than is usually available in other tools. The code solves more than just refractive or diffractive challenges. It can calculate scattering too. The tool has all the latest modeling modes including waveguide and nano structures. The solver is fast and can handle complex geometries. I can run a design on the integrated optics team and have it come back to me within minutes! We have dozens of big name customers that use the tools and find it the best one out there. “CODE V is the best optical design tool breast cancer: a logical next step. The incidence of contralateral breast cancer

varies by racial/ethnic group and its etiology remains largely unknown. Understanding this variation may help tailor strategies to reduce the risk of contralateral breast cancer. We review evidence regarding the risk factors for development of contralateral breast cancer in the context of patient and tumor characteristics and potential interventions targeting these risk factors. There is considerable variation in the risk of development of contralateral breast cancer by age and race/ethnicity. However, risk of contralateral breast cancer appears to be similar in triple-negative, ER-positive, and ER-negative cancers and appears higher in familial breast cancers. Animal studies suggest that risk factors may differ by inherited risk factors and heritable gene alterations. Limited data suggest that tamoxifen use may reduce risk of contralateral breast cancer in high-risk women with ER-positive tumors. Contralateral breast cancer risk is high in some racial/ethnic groups; future studies should evaluate the consequences of exposure to
