To achieve a deeper level of immersion and gameplay realism in FIFA 2022, EA Sports has released a new trailer that demonstrates how it will feel like to play the game. The teaser also showcases the new animation and fluidity featured in the FIFA 2022 edition. The updated graphics engine in FIFA 2022 is able to achieve a higher level of realism, which is possible thanks to the aforementioned motion capture data and new animation system. "One of the things that makes the FIFA engine so special is that it allows us to create amazingly real-feeling animations. However, we wanted to take the next step in terms of making the game more immersive," said Daniel Castro, Senior Designer at EA Sports. "The HyperMotion technology provides us with a lot of data that allows us to make the action more fluid and the player movements more natural, as if the player had just played a real match," continued Daniel. "The overall feeling you will get while playing the game is one of absolute realism," said Andrew Meredith, Senior Gameplay Designer at EA Sports. "The technology is essential in providing us with authentic sensations that can influence decision-making, including how players control their character," added Andrew. "The footage from the real players used in the teaser demonstrates the incredible level of detail we have been able to achieve with FIFA 2022," said Matt Gibson, Gameplay Lead on FIFA 2022. "While the previous FIFA games have always been praised for their beautiful models and animations, this new video shows that FIFA 2022 adds a whole new level of realism," added Matt. The new animation system, like most of the game's other features, is powered by EA's Visual Intelligence technology, which is able to recognize player shapes and animations. Previously, EA created visual intelligence algorithms to recognize player shapes and key details such as their height and weight. "The engine uses all this information to determine your character movement, while the player model is designed to emulate the real player actions," continued Daniel. "In the past we have had an overall vision of what the player should look like," said Andrew. "In FIFA 2022, we let the player model have a more diverse range of shapes and heights, and it reacts to the game
