Page 4.Chronic eosinophilic pneumonia with pulmonary symptoms treated by high-dose IVIG: A case report. A 65-year-old man presented with a 2-year history of progressive dyspnea on exertion (DOP) and dry cough with exertion. He had a smoking history of 30 pack-year history. Computed tomography of the chest revealed diffuse bilateral infiltrates with associated cystic changes and consolidation, particularly on the right upper lobe. Patchy areas of ground-glass opacity were noted throughout the lungs. Cytological examinations of induced sputum and bronchoalveolar lavage fluid revealed elevated eosinophil count. Peripheral eosinophil count was elevated (~50,000/ μ L, 14%). The patient's condition was initially treated with oral prednis
