and the data she makes are endless. This point makes the whole of automation interesting; But I will make one thing clear; if you are expecting you to do this job for you, you are pretty much doomed. If you want to automate the job of making a lasting impression in a company environment, the way to learn the skills you need is to take someone else's job. What do I mean by that? I mean find someone who has done your job at that company to learn from them. I mean find a place where they work and observe for as long as you can without interrupting their work. I mean sit, wait and listen. And I mean learn. Learn how they work, how they talk and how they present themselves. When I say their work, of course I mean; The position The work they are doing The subject matter This is more difficult when you want to automate this skill. You cannot do this by yourself, because not only is automating it not the way to go, but even if you get it 100% right you will still fail because nothing you can do to improve will be as good as when someone else does it. So let me give you a few tips; When you sit down for a job interview; Once you know the job, Once you know the person, And you think you are ready for the next step, Do not sit down and say, Now I want to do this, now I want to try this. You will never see how good you are at this at the moment. So stand up and walk around and practise the points you are making so that when you do sit down you actually are ready. And when you leave the interview, be sure to get a good night's sleep. If you can stay up until 11pm the night before and be prepared to hit the ground running the next day, You can guarantee that you will make a good impression, Make the most of the time you have and be sure that it is not just a waste of time. What about me? I
